Connecting the dots to catalyse change:

Interactions among SDGs are crucial. In some cases, actions taken to achieve one SDG may unintentionally hinder progress towards another. Such trade-offs are likely to make the overall achievement of the goals more difficult and inefficient unless they are identified and managed. For example, actions to achieve SDG 7 (Affordable and Clean Energy) may unintentionally hinder progress towards SDG 13 (Climate Action) if the energy produced is not clean. Conversely, actions to achieve SDG 13 may unintentionally hinder progress towards SDG 7 if the focus is solely on reducing emissions without considering the need for affordable and clean energy.

1) SDGs also frequently reinforce each other – Actions to achieve one goal can favour progress towards one or more of the other goals. These synergies provide exceptional opportunities for investment and targeting them will reap maximum rewards.

Investing in these types of actions provides a valuable opportunity to work towards multiple SDGs: it enables countries with limited resources to invest efficiently and avoid unintended trade-offs.
